

TRAVEL GARMENT

Abstract of the Disclosure

A garment is adapted for packing articles of clothing and other items therein for traveling, particularly on a commercial airliner. In a preferred embodiment, the garment is in the form of an overcoat or trench coat and is free of any metal components. An arrangement of pockets of varying size and dimension is provided on the inside of the garment for holding the clothing articles and other items therein. At least some pockets are provided with straps for securing trousers and other items of clothing in a manner which limits movement, sagging and wrinkling of the clothing items. The pocket panels are preferably formed of a mesh material to provide ventilation and ease of visual inspection of the contents packed in the pockets. In at least one embodiment, the entire lining, including the pockets, is removable from a remainder of the garment.